

ARTIST STATEMENT

I paint, draw, print, photograph, and take inspiration from the natural world. Plants, in particular, speak to me. I am interested in the interconnectedness of all life, and the complex entanglements of the human and the non-human.

Part of my daily practice has long been a walk through the nature preserve where I live. Over the past year this has evolved into the heart of my practice. The fleeting and temporal nature of the observed world, along with the impossible desire to name my perceptions, inspires me to examine the nature of this place as fully as possible, across and through multiple scaffolds of time. I have approached this examination within the framework of a rule-based approach. I visit the preserve repeatedly during all 24 hours of the day, all types of weather. I take note of the lichen on a branch, the quality of light on the snow, the color of the air. I pay attention to both details and to the larger scale of the ecosystem. At times I take note of my own feelings and thoughts while there, or the sense I have of being made more whole just by being there.

In the process I have encountered, and, at times, embraced, the ongoing conceptualization of nature. At other times I am representing the landscape as a place of tender beauty, an idealization of suburban nature into inspirational wilderness. With every passing day my concern over climate change intensifies, and I paint to represent what we still have and what we can lose. At this moment, as our culture has become more removed from nature, there is an increased acknowledgement of the collective need for connection with the natural world. The overarching desire to reconnect to the natural world, to be at one with it-and the impossibility of that desire-is at the center of my practice.

Cynthia MacCollum is a painter, printmaker, and photographer who lives and works in New Canaan, CT. Her work has been shown at the Katonah Museum of Art in Katonah, NY; the Center for Contemporary Printmaking in Norwalk, CT; Elisa Contemporary Art, NY; First Street Gallery in New York; The Kellogg Gallery at Cal Poly Pomona, Blue Print Gallery in Dallas, Panopticon Gallery in Boston, and internationally in Cadaques, Spain, the UK, France and Hong Kong. In 2013 Cynthia's work was selected by curator Donald Kuspit, one of 32 pieces out of thousands of submissions, to be part of the First Street Gallery National Juried Exhibit in New York City.

As a child, MacCollum spent countless hours out of doors, often near the creek in the ravine behind her home. This early connection to nature instilled a reverence for the natural world that pervades all of her work.

MacCollum's daily habit of walking through the nature preserve near her home has informed and inspired much of her work over the last several years.

MacCollum is a member of New Canaan's Silvermine Guild, the Center for Contemporary Printmaking, and Odetta Digital. A graduate of Washington University in St. Louis with a major in Art History and a minor in Fine Art, she has continued her studies at the Center for Contemporary Printmaking, and through monthly critiques with the CritLab. Artist Residencies for three summers, at the Skopelos Foundation for the Arts in Skopelos, Greece, have deepened MacCollum's interest in the intersection of nature and art, and of painting, printmaking, and alternative processes. In addition to private collections, her work can be found in the Fine Art Collection of the Montefiore Health System and Memorial Sloane Kettering.
